Saturday, June 3, 2:00 PM Great Courses Video Lecture Series – Pompeii: Daily Life in an Ancient Roman City, Morrison Theatre. The eruption of Mount Vesuvius was one of the most iconic natural disasters in the history of the ancient world. Over three harrowing days, the inhabitants of Pompeii experienced the full force of Mother Nature's fury in the form of blasts of superheated gases, rains of pumice stone and ash, and rivers of scorching mud. Yet while the account of the eruption is compelling, Pompeii holds a much more intriguing story for historians: a tale of everyday 1st-century life, flash-frozen in time under mountains of sediment. The tragedy left a rich record of daily life as it was experienced by all strata of Roman society; housewives, slaves, merchants, and politicians were stopped in their tracks on that fateful day. Through careful excavations of Pompeii, scholars have revealed the hidden complexities of ancient life, unveiling the everyday activities of commerce, agriculture, politics, and private life otherwise lost to modern eyes. In 24 lectures, Classics Professor Steven L. Tuck unearths these everyday truths to create a full portrait of daily life in the ancient world. Each Saturday we will show two half-hour lectures.

Gauguin's beautiful Polynesian women are often depicted sitting quietly amid lush green landscapes, surrounded by flowers and golden skies. Was this the real Tahiti, or did the artist make it up in order to create on canvas the paradise he sought but never quite found? This lecture will explore the artist's search for the exotic in Brittany, Martinique, Tahiti and finally, in the Marquesas. Fifteen years of research led Dr. Boyle-Turner to uncover many new facts and ideas about Gauguin's last few years in the remote Marquesan islands, research that resulted in the just-published book Paul Gauguin & the Marquesas: Paradise Found? Colorful Images of these enchanting places will enliven the lecture and make the place and the artist's life there come alive.
